The Lens of Experience

How our lives shape the way we see the Lawson killing

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

It's been with great sadness and a lingering sense of hope that I've watched news of David Josiah Lawson's killing and its aftermath reverberate through Humboldt County.

No matter what happened at a Spear Avenue house party on April 15, the violent death of a 19-year-old Humboldt State University sophomore should be cause for honest reflection, but I'm seeing far too little of it.

Having covered Lawson's stabbing death and the ensuing case against his alleged killer, 23-year-old Kyle Christopher Zoellner, I probably know more than most about what happened in those pre-dawn hours. But I have no idea who killed Lawson or why. Witness testimony is grossly inconsistent on what happened that night and, even ignoring the inconsistencies, nobody has come forward to definitively say they saw Zoellner stab Lawson or even that they saw a knife in Zoellner's — or anyone else's — hands. As of the moment a murder charge facing Zoellner was dismissed May 5, there wasn't a shred of physical evidence connecting Zoellner — or anyone else — to the stabbing.

As dissatisfying as it is to say, I don't know what happened to David Josiah Lawson. I don't know why he was killed or who killed him. And — if we're going to honestly discuss his death and what it means — I believe that's a premise we all need to start from. If you disagree because you witnessed Lawson's killing and have so far remained silent, then you need to put down the paper or whatever device you're reading this on and go speak to the police. That's not a matter of snitching or informing, it's simply what living in an open nation of laws demands of you.

The rest of us should recognize that — suspicions aside — we know very little. But reading through the comments of public officials, witnesses and average folks — in media statements, online comments and social media posts — I find myself stunned at how sure everyone is. Depending on who you're listening to or reading, this was a hate crime or a case of reverse racism, an example of the generations-old systemic prejudices that still exist in our country or a portrait of new, post-Obama era entitlements, uncomplicated by other factors. It's understandable but also disappointing and limiting.

All of us in this community need to recognize that we're seeing this case — and really everything around us — through the lens of our experience, with the bias that carries. With that said, let me tell you a bit about my life experiences and the lens they have left me to see the world through.

Humboldt County is the whitest place I've ever lived. By far. To be clear, I love it here. It's my home and my daughter's home, the only place she will be raised. And, if we're still being forthright, that sometimes tears me up inside. That's not because I distrust or dislike white people — I am one and count many among my friends — or because I suffer some guilt at the atrocities that people who look like me have carried out against a multitude of people and cultures, both at home and abroad. Nope. It's because I believe diversity inherently enriches communities, that multiculturalism is a cornerstone of this country's ideals and its potential. My life is richer because I grew up in the melting pot of the Bay Area, exposed to an array of cultures, and she will be robbed of that.

I was born and raised in Oakland, the child of solidly upper-middle class parents with a devotion to social justice. My father marched with Martin Luther King Jr. and helped start the free speech movement in Berkeley, and my mother moved across the country to learn to care for people with mental illness and fight for women's right to educational and professional advancement. For years, beginning at the age of 6, I was the only white kid — or one of only a couple — on my West Oakland baseball teams. I fell in love with — and eventually married — a woman who is the daughter of a Mexican immigrant and a second-generation Mexican American. I followed her to Mexico, where we lived for a year in an idyllic town that counted me among its few white residents.

This is to say that in some of my 38 years on this planet I have experienced being the other, the person who is immediately recognizable as different from the rest. I found these experiences to be alternately intimidating, exhilarating, interesting and, well, scary. Now, I am keenly aware that I say this as a straight white male, as someone who because of my gender, my orientation, my skin color and my family history, was spared many of the systemic challenges that face other people growing up in this world. Every time I experienced being the other, after all, I returned to an American culture that historically favored straight white men and still does.

When my wife and I arrived in Humboldt County shortly after our wedding, we squirmed in the living room of an acquaintance as she described one of her softball teammates, explaining that the girl's speed was due to the fact she was Mexican and grew up running from the police. I'll never forget that moment and the stomach-turning feeling it induced in me.

Comments I've heard in recent weeks about Lawson's killing — and some of its coverage in the media — have invoked similar, if stronger, feelings. But there have also been some moments that have left me hopeful.

I got a phone call from a middle-aged guy last week. He grew up in Arcata and said he was about 8 when he met a black person for the first time, admitting that he was shocked when the color of the man's skin didn't rub off on his own when their hands touched. The man said the diversity Humboldt State University has brought to Humboldt County is a good thing.

Also last week, I watched as protesters gathered in front of Arcata City Hall to demand “justice for Josiah,” forming a human chain that, arm-in-arm, encircled the building as they chanted loudly. As the crowd chanted, “No Justice, No Peace, No Racist Police,” Elijah Chandler — a friend of Lawson's who became somewhat of a lightning rod in the community after he very publicly accused police and emergency medical technicians of a racially prejudiced and unprofessional response to Lawson's killing — stepped in. He grabbed the megaphone, urged positivity and led the crowd in a renewed chant that dropped the last phrase.

At that same rally, I spotted University Police Chief Donn Peterson handing out water to protesters, saying later that he wanted his students to feel safe and supported, despite the fact that one of his officers was among those accused by Chandler and that some protesters' ire has been directed at his Arcata colleagues.

Like the demonstrators who filled the streets of Arcata last week and stood sentry outside the Humboldt County Courthouse as Lawson's family met with Humboldt County District Attorney Maggie Fleming, I, too, want justice for Josiah. I want his killer to be found and held to account by the laws of our state.

But my life and years of reporting have also taught me that true and complete justice won't be found in a courtroom. If we as a community truly want to find justice for Josiah, we need to begin with ourselves. We need to recognize the personal lens through which we see the world and question it, challenging ourselves to see life behind the Redwood Curtain as someone else might.

Now, I understand that's hard for some, whether they've been here for decades only to see the county change before their eyes or they're fresh off the bus at HSU, realizing they've just landed in the whitest place they've ever lived. In many ways, it can seem daunting. But my life has also taught me that change is incremental and simple acts of kindness can have lasting impacts — the kid who asks another kid who looks different from the rest to play catch at baseball practice, the young woman who invites the foreigners to make mole with her family and, perhaps, the police chief who stands with protesters in a show of support.

Again, I don't know what happened to David Josiah Lawson. But I do know that since his death I've heard a lot of people say they don't feel safe here. I believe them. And as the husband of a brown woman and the father of a brown girl who I want to give every opportunity in this life, that tears me up inside and I want to change it. ●

Monopolized

Editor:

The institution of Humboldt State, particularly the University Center Board of Directors, needs to be held accountable for the decisions they've made on behalf of the student body (NCJ Daily, April 27). Their decisions, particularly the 2011 choice to establish Follett Corporation as the primary owner of our bookstore, have impacted the financial crisis experienced by many students at HSU.

What I ask of the board of directors is to no longer give in to corporate monopolies in their attempt to seize student assets, and to reconsider a student-run bookstore on campus. By doing so, an increase in job opportunities will provide students with more experience in working and self-governance. Affording a $400 bill for textbooks is straining, even for students who work full time and, while there are alternatives for buying cheaper/used books, a student-owned bookstore could help facilitate cheaper alternatives and ease financial stress for student budgets.

It is the responsibility of the University Center Board of Directors to protect student governance and student authority on campus. Allowing a monopolizing corporation to dictate textbook costs and limit options only increases financial strain and adds even more stress for students already combatting debt, Humboldt County's lack of jobs, mental health issues and institutional oppression.

Having lived in Honeydew for 37 years, I have travelled the route of the May 20 Tour of the Unknown Coast bicycle race innumerable times in my vehicle. Never have I seen the road in such horrendous condition as I did on my last transit, May 9 ("Board of Supervisors Talks 'Band Aid' Funding for Roads," posted Feb. 8).

A representative of the Public Works Department offered assurances that the road crew would do everything possible to prepare the course. Representatives of the Tour of the Unknown Coast have not responded to my concerns about rider safety.

I earnestly encourage all who are planning to participate in the event to travel the entire course in a vehicle prior to the race in order to make an informed decision as to whether they are up to what will certainly be a punishing experience.

Restoration

Editor:

Regarding the North Coast Journal's May 4 article, "The Butterfly Effect," describing Daniel Veillieux and Joseph Ferber's inspiring vision to transform Arcata into a wildlife habitat: Why must all the plants be native? What about roses and lilacs?

The simple answer is that wildlife populations need native plants to eat and use for nest-building, habitat and raising their young. Non-native plants simply do not meet the dietary requirements for the healthy adults, larvae and young of the many species. Wildlife species are experiencing die-offs because the plants that serve them simply do not exist locally. Although, native habitats have been preserved and protected in parks and reserves, human habits have historically excluded native plants.

Urbanized areas and huge agricultural developments, deforested lands, urban developments and rural homes have expanded greatly. The amount of land protected or even available for wildlife is rapidly vanishing. As a result, we have seen massive decreases in native plants and wildlife populations that depend on the diverse native ecosystems that once covered Humboldt County and California.

California was known as the Floristic Province because of its great natural beauty, diversity and abundance. All living things collectively supported a native ecosystem that was sustainable, i.e., without dams and fertilizers; it sustained life. The people who lived here valued their land, wetlands, shores, dunes, rivers and marshes. They recognized this place Humboldt as a paradise.

The time has come to restore these lands or face more extinctions of plant and animal species. It is proper that humans involve themselves in plans to reverse the negative effects of human dominance and take on the task of restoring the native habitat and ecosystems. It will benefit the human race as we learn to be a beneficial part of nature. It is believed that such restorations, on a large scale, would contribute to the reversal of climate change.

Choices in Sum

Editor:

The tragedy of the young men at an all-night, drunken party started long before one of them was stabbed. Choices were made that had absolutely nothing to do with the color of anyone's skin. The sum of those choices ended horribly. The tragedy continued when, without knowing the facts, the race card was played by the media and some of our leaders.

Eureka Ordered to Pay $90K in Police Video Case

City Council's handling of the case may have violated the Brown Act

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

A Humboldt County Superior Court judge has ordered the city of Eureka to pay Davis attorney Paul Nicholas Boylan almost $90,000 for his work defending the Journal from a city appeal that sought to block the release of video footage of a controversial arrest.

"This shows there's a price to the city's legal adventurism," Boylan said of the order, which Judge Christopher Wilson signed last month. "You've got so many places where this money could have gone. This is a huge, huge expenditure of taxpayer money solely for the purpose of keeping the public in the dark on an issue they're interested in. There's no justification. None."

The award stems from a two-year legal battle that saw the city fight the Journal's petition asking the court to release video footage from the dash camera of a Eureka police patrol car that captured the Dec. 6, 2012, arrest of a 14-year-old suspect. The arrest led to excessive force allegations, which led to the arrest of one of the involved officers. (Charges were later dismissed.)

In May of 2015, Wilson granted the Journal's petition over the city's objections, finding that the public's interest in viewing the video outweighed the privacy concerns of anyone involved. The city quickly appealed, arguing that the video should be considered a confidential police officer personnel record, which are granted special protections under state law. At this point, Boylan agreed to represent the Journal in the case on contingency, meaning he'd pursue fees and costs from the city if he successfully defended the appeal; if the city prevailed, he wouldn't make a penny.

In July, the appellate court issued a published opinion in the Journal's favor, setting a statewide precedent that police videos depicting an arrest that occurred in public cannot be considered confidential personnel records. Three days after the court's ruling, Boylan emailed Eureka City Attorney Cyndy Day-Wilson and urged her to accept the outcome.

"I am not posturing when I say that, should you appeal this further, you won't win," Boylan wrote. "Although anything is possible, a reversal of the appellate court's opinion is extremely unlikely for a bunch of procedural and substantive reasons. Further appeal will do nothing but waste more public employee time and taxpayer money."

Day-Wilson did not heed Boylan's advice and instead petitioned the California Supreme Court to depublish the appellate court's opinion — meaning the city would still have to turn over video of the 2012 arrest but the case wouldn't set a statewide precedent. The supreme court denied the city's request in October.

Shortly after the denial, Boylan said he reached out to the city to discuss a possible settlement with regard to the fees and costs the appellate court ruled he was entitled to. The city offered to pay $5,000, according to Boylan, and settlement talks crumbled.

When Boylan filed a motion in Wilson's court requesting attorney fees, he argued that he'd worked more than 170 hours on the case, deserved an hourly rate of $650 and a multiplier to account for the fact that he took the case on contingency and it resulted in a public benefit. In total, he asked for more than $150,000 in fees and costs. Day-Wilson countered that this was ridiculous, arguing that Boylan's hours were inflated and his requested hourly rate was well in excess of the one the city paid — $175 an hour — for outside counsel on the case. Further, Day-Wilson argued, there was absolutely no public benefit to the case and Boylan's legal advice was ineffective, meaning whatever he's owed should be reduced by half.

After a multitude of back-and-forth filings, Wilson ruled last month in Boylan's favor, ordering the city to pay him $87,600 — 115.9 hours of work paid at $500 per hour with a 25 percent enhancement because he took the case on contingency and another $15,000 because the city fought his fees request. The ruling takes Boylan to task for some hours estimates that "seem unreasonably high," repeatedly admonishes the city for making assertions unsupported by evidence or case law but deems that "the public significantly benefits by being able to obtain police video of an arrest, especially where there are suspicions or allegations of excessive force."

Coupled with the more than $10,000 the city spent on the appeal, the total bill for Eureka's taxpayers came out to about $100,000 — a not insignificant hit to the city's $27 million general fund. (For comparison's sake, that number's a bit shy of the $110,000 annual contract the city recently canceled with the local chamber of commerce to run its visitor's center and a bit more than the $90,000 in annual salary and benefits the city pays an entry-level police officer.)

Eureka City Manager Greg Sparks said he thinks there's enough money in the city attorney's existing $562,000 budget for this year to cover Boylan's $87,600 bill, meaning the city council won't have to make a special allocation to cover the costs.

Sparks was noncommittal when asked who within City Hall made the decisions to challenge the Journal's petition seeking release of the video, appeal Wilson's ruling and finally petition the state supreme court for review. The case has only been agendized for discussion in closed session with the city council a couple of times, and no final council action has ever been taken on the case. But Sparks seemed to indicate the case was pursued at the council's discretion.

"Certainly, staff can't make that decision — not the city attorney, not the city manager," he said. "I can't comment on what was discussed in closed session but, certainly, the council provides direction to the city manager and the city attorney on issues like this."

As to why no action has ever been reported out of closed session on the case if decisions were being made — like whether to appeal or petition the supreme court — Sparks said "the city attorney advised the council on that."

If it is the case that the council directed Day-Wilson in closed session to appeal Wilson's initial ruling or to later petition the supreme court to review the case, that's a violation of California's open meeting laws — known as the Brown Act — according to Terry Francke, general counsel for the nonprofit government watchdog Californians Aware, who also helped revise the act in 1994.

Francke said in an email to the Journal that these are absolutely decisions that should have been reported out of closed session. He pointed to California Government Code section 54957.1 (a)(2), which holds that the legislative body of any local agency should publicly report out of closed session any approval given to its legal counsel to seek appellate review or relief, with the report disclosing the vote, the identities involved in the legal action and the "substance of the litigation."

None of the five sitting councilmembers, the city attorney nor the mayor returned emails seeking comment for this story.

Boylan said this has been "one of the most bizarre" cases he's ever seen, saying the ultimate question is why the city would "go forward with this exotic legal theory" at such a substantial liability to taxpayers only to shield the public from seeing an incident involving public employees that transpired on a public street. Ultimately, however, Boylan said there is a public benefit to the case.

"The benefit is that nobody can withhold a video on the grounds that it's a personnel document for something that happened in public," he said. "There's a benefit to the public because this case sets to rest — forever — the use of that argument. ... It's rare for an appellate attorney to encounter an issue that is so clean. Appellate issues are oftentimes enormously complicated, usually dealing with the interpretation of statutes that are in conflict. This is different. This is a matter of common sense." ●

Editor's note: In the interest of full disclosure, it should be noted that this reporter personally filed the petition seeking disclosure of the dash cam video in this case and authored the lower court briefings on behalf of the Journal.

Battle Cry

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

In a May 11 press release, the newly assembled Humboldt County Growers Alliance announced its mission as a trade association of local cannabis farmers and business owners who have pledged “to work in a responsibly regulated industry.” Later in the release, the group states its desire to support the values of Humboldt communities, maintain a healthy environment and include folks from all over our “diverse county.”

OK, good stuff. But in the second paragraph, things get a little Braveheart: “We are the seed hunters, carriers of the torch, next-generation extract artists, innovators, and the pioneers who have sacrificed at times, their freedom, to protect and nourish a plant that is so deeply woven into the story of Humboldt County.”

Really? I’ll give you seed hunting and even the loose use of “artist,” but slow your roll on marijuana martyrdom. Might not some of the alliance members have gotten into the industry specifically because illegality made it lucrative? Because if it wasn’t for the money, there are some less risky things you can do to “protect and nourish” local flora, like volunteering with the Native Plant Society.

This sanctimonious, pre-battle-hype tone isn’t new. When California Cannabis Voice Humboldt unveiled its proposed land use ordinance on the Humboldt County courthouse steps (“Draft Day,” July 7, 2015), co-founder Luke Bruner drew applause telling growers, “You have nothing to lose but your chains and your shame.” The quote is a nod to The Communist Manifesto but you’d be excused for thinking he was drawing parallels between moving pounds out of a greenhouse and keeping money in mattresses instead of banks to being enslaved.

The hypocrisy and untenable laws of cannabis prohibition need to change, and it’s good to see people trying to pay taxes and get right with regulation, especially as it concerns environmental impacts. But growers with deep, sticky pockets playing up their self sacrifice against a backdrop of the disproportionately high arrest and imprisonment rates of people of color — a history that results in blocking those same people from starting newly legal cannabis businesses — smacks of clueless privilege. It's a bad look that the overwhelmingly white upper echelons of the industry can't afford if its members are as serious about increasing diversity in its ranks as its panel discussions on inclusion would suggest.

In a recent New Yorker article, Vice contributor and former editor of High Times David Bienenstock said, "Cannabis was my gateway to social justice and to the idea of the government as an oppressive, illegitimate force." So after what one presumes was an adequate high school education with some mention of segregation, to say nothing of Native genocide and slavery, weed was his a-ha moment. Must be nice. Then again, if realizations about the criminalization of pot got him woke to state oppression, to which our War on Drugs has been an essential tool — I'm desperate enough to call it a win. By any means necessary, right?

Speaking of those oppressive laws, last week Attorney General Jeff Sessions — not exactly a booster for cannabis or people of color — announced plans to make the War on Drugs great again. The Washington Post reported that Sessions "has directed his federal prosecutors to pursue the most severe penalties possible, including mandatory minimum sentences, in his first step toward a return to the war on drugs of the 1980s and 1990s that resulted in long sentences for many minority defendants and packed U.S. prisons."

So does this mean Sessions is going to roll up to the woods like it's 1995? That's still unclear. But Sessions did say, "These are drug dealers, and you drug dealers are going to prison." So now might be a good time for the cannabis industry to cut the self-righteousness and get down to some serious solidarity. After all, Sessions is drawing battle lines and growers may soon need all the allies they can find.

Petite Parks a Perk for Parks and Rec?

As the Journal was going to press on Tuesday night, the Eureka City Council was deciding whether to create two “pocket parks” designed to occupy existing landscaped areas. The tiny parks, one at Fourth and Q streets and the other at Broadway and Fairfield, would honor the city’s relationship with its sister city of Kamisu, Japan and its designation as a Coast Guard City, respectively.

But redesignating the green spaces, currently maintained by Parks and Recreation would serve an ulterior purpose: giving the city more leverage to discourage inappropriate use of the areas. According to the language in the agenda item, the areas are already attracting “park-like usage despite not being designated as parks.” The change could allow “the department more flexibility in their management and allow for the enforcement of park rules.” Parks and Recreation Director Miles Slattery responded in an email that the Eureka municipal code “has certain provisions related to parks that could be enforced in these areas if approved by council.”

He might be referring to provisions against camping, smoking, sleeping, loitering and public drinking, all of which currently happen at these two city-owned properties, which are highway-adjacent and have signs welcoming tourists to Eureka. Asked if designating the areas as parks would discourage inappropriate use, Eureka Police Chief Andrew Mills was noncommittal.

“I’d love to see more diversion taking place,” he said, but added that he couldn’t exactly post an officer there all day. “Some people feel that strictly enforcing municipal codes will solve all problems. I see no evidence of that.”

Slattery – who in the past has said his current budget is inadequate to properly maintain the 600 acres of parks, playgrounds, ball fields and landscaped city properties that fall on the shoulders of his staff – insists that turning the green strips into parks will actually reduce his department’s existing workload.

Representatives of the Eureka-Kamisú Sister City Association said they are “overjoyed” at the potential of the landscaped area at Fourth and Q streets becoming a cherry orchard. Kamisu, which has its own small redwood forest in honor of Eureka, offered to donate cherry trees several years ago but, to date, no appropriate location had been found.

“Our relationship with Kamisu is a valuable and irreplaceable resource; the similarity between our cities are striking,” association representative J.R. Tilghman wrote. “It may be a hard pill to swallow, but Eureka could learn quite a lot from its sister across the pond.”

Arcata Threshold Choir brings comfort to those in need

By Kimberly Wear

Inside a bright blue cottage tucked along a quiet street, members of the Arcata Threshold Choir gathered on a recent Saturday morning to rehearse in the living room of co-founder Jane Riggan.

With white song books tucked in their laps, the group settled into chairs and sofas encircling the warmly decorated space awash in color and patterns. Dashes of conversations mingled with laughter amid the sunlit room.

After a few moments, the choir's musical coordinator Maggie McKnight made a song recommendation and played a quick note on the silver pitch pipe in her hand. There was a brief sliver of silence. Then, the women began to sing.

Almost like a lullaby, the lyrics were simple and repetitious, the a cappella singing soft but strong — a gentle blending of melody and verse specially arranged to bring comfort.

*"I let the river, the healing water,
I let the
I let the river, the healing water,
I let the
I let the river, the healing water,
I let the river carry me home.
I let the river wash away. River carry me home."*

"That was nice," someone says softly when the song is done.

One of many facets setting the Threshold Choir apart from traditional ensembles is the way the singers approach the music, Riggan explains, saying they "really try to hear each other, to sing as one voice, intimately."

When called upon, their voices are brought together — just two to four members at a time — to bring solace to individuals in need. Often, the singing takes place at the bedside of someone who is approaching the last threshold of their life, as the choir's name denotes.

"There's a sacredness at that moment. ... It's about that connection at the end of life. It's moving away from that fearful thing of, 'Oh, they're dying.' It's about being their community," choir member Diana Noyes says.

*"I am sending you light to heal
you, to hold you.
I am sending you light to hold you in love. No matter where you go.
No matter where you've been, you'll never walk alone. I feel you deep within."*

They call it "kindness made audible."

Those are the words of Kate Munger, who founded the first Threshold Choir in the Bay Area some 17 years ago. Today, there are more than 150 chapters worldwide, according to the nonprofit, bringing song to those "facing death, grief, or suffering."

Whether in England or Australia or Arcata, the choirs share the same songs — with many of the original pieces composed by Munger — and the same mission.

But, Riggan notes, each one also has its own “flavor,” with some more formal than others. “It’s nice that there can be that diversity,” she says.

Anyone is welcome to join, Riggan says.

No formal musical training is required, just an ear for a melody, an ability to carry a tune and a calling to help others. While only women were present at the rehearsal that Saturday, the choir has one male singer.

Dennice Stone, volunteer coordinator for Hospice of Humboldt, says she has seen firsthand the comfort music can provide, sometimes bringing about a sort of awakening, even if just for a passing moment, that allows families a window of connection with loved ones who are dying or have lost their memories to dementia.

“Threshold Choir is a great group of dedicated people and we’ve used them before ... and they’re just really neat people giving freely of their time,” Stone says.

Many of the Arcata members, like McKnight, joined at the urging of friends or family members who sing in choirs in other cities. Several others have backgrounds in caregiving, advocacy and support that translate naturally into providing “service through song.”

The choir is available to “anyone who could get comfort from singing,” Riggan says, not just for those who facing the end of their lives.

“All we want to do is help,” she says.

Munger and Riggan both credited their experiences with AIDS patients during the early years of the epidemic for planting the seed that would bring together their love of song and desire to help ease the passage between life and death.

“I think people are just called to do it,” says Riggan, an East Coast transplant and retired social worker who describes

Munger as “an extraordinary woman with such a big heart and such talent.”

After a Threshold Choir recording brought Riggan to tears, she knew she wanted to start a local chapter. The pieces began to fall into place when she was introduced to fellow co-founder Sandy Sweitzer by someone who knew their shared passion for starting a local choir.

When the two organized their first meeting in 2013 — using only word of mouth — more than a dozen people showed up. While membership has ebbed and flowed over the last several years, the Arcata choir now has a core group of about 20 singers to call on.

“Since the beginning it’s just been magical for me,” Riggan says, her voice breaking with emotion as she looked around at the group of 15 women assembled in her living room. “The right people came. They know why they’re coming and they came.”

While Sweitzer has since passed away, Riggan says her late friend was a driving force behind the Arcata chapter’s start, pushing to get the choir off the ground, even if there were still some loose ends to tie up.

“She was always kicking me, ‘Let’s do it now,’” Riggan says with a smile.

After Sweitzer died in February of 2016, the Arcata Threshold Choir gathered for one last good-bye, singing at her service.

“People came up and said she just would have loved it,” Riggan says.

While they found their way to the choir for different reasons at different times, the tight bond members have formed with each other is evident in the conversation flowing about the room, punctuated with inside jokes and bursts of laughter.

“I’m not naturally a hugger,” Lissa Anderson quips about the influence of her choir colleagues. “I’ve been transformed.”

Singing under such intensely personally

Threshold Choir: 'Service Through Song'

The Arcata Threshold Choir receives singing requests from families, chaplains, medical professionals, spiritual communities and Hospice. The service is provided free of cost but the group does accept donations to cover expenses.

To request a bedside visit, contact 633-8022.

The choir is open to new members. To learn more about Threshold Choir, visit www.thresholdchoir.org or call Jane Riggan at 502-4245.

circumstances sometimes means needing a way to unload a bit of life's everyday stresses in order to gather by someone's bedside in the right emotional space.

That's where the regular Saturday rehearsals come in. More than just a chance to practice, it's also a time for members to reconnect and just enjoy each other's company.

While their singing brings comfort to people in their times of need, the singers also understand the importance of supporting each other.

"It's just a place where you can safely get a little off your chest," Riggan says.

Many of the choir members have a story of a special moment — no matter how brief — that embodies for them how much of a difference their singing can make.

Anderson spoke about an elderly man at a local nursing home who was very thin, lying in bed with his eyes closed, and seemingly unaware of the choir's presence as its members entered the room.

Gathering around him, they began to sing.

"After about two songs, he lifted one arm, then put it down," she recalls. "We just kept on singing. Then he lifted the same arm and put it down. We just kept on singing. ... The next time he opened his eyes — big, beautiful blue eyes.

"To just see the music bring him back a little bit was very powerful," she says.

He died a few hours later.

Dot Campbell, a caregiver who sways gently as she sings, shared a similar experience about a 93-year-old woman she tended to before joining the choir. Sensing her death was drawing near, Campbell says she felt a need to sing for the woman and asked a friend to join her.

The experience, Campbell says, was an epiphany that eventually led her to join the Threshold Choir.

"The two of us sang to this dear one and it was the first time I had ever done that," Campbell says. "There are a lot of ways we can go out but it never occurred to me that we could go out on the bliss of song."

*"So many angels all around me.
 So many angels, it's you I see.
 So many angels all around me.
 So many angels, it's you I see.
 So many angels all around me.
 So many angels, it's you I see.
 So many angels gathered around.
 So many angels, it's you I found.
 So many angels gathered around.
 So many angels, it's you I found.
 So many angels gathered around.
 So many angels, it's you I found."*

Those moments leaving a lasting impression, choir members say.

"You feel so grateful to the people who allow you into that intimate space," Riggan says. "It's a gift every time. It's just a huge gift." ●

Cutting your chops on local pork.

High on the Hog

By Jada Calypso Brotman

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Back when I lived in Brooklyn, shopping “locally” was a real problem. I made the effort to eat organically and locally, but it proved prohibitively difficult. There was no supermarket within walking distance so for daily purchases I had to content myself with the corner bodega. Whilst rich with such nominal luxuries as Bustelo coffee and egg and cheese on a roll, the selection of fresh foods left much to be desired. I would make the weekly trek to the Whole Foods on Union Square to stock up on foods that were at least organic but very rarely local. Now that I live back in Humboldt, I really appreciate being able to walk to the Co-op and select fresh produce from a multitude of farms that are within a reasonable driving distance (shout-out to Little Rivers Farms, your Spring Mix lettuces are amazing). Of course, we also have fabulous beef grown right here in Humboldt and you can get some local pork at the farmers market, but how great would it be to go direct to the source?

My brother Max and his partner Claire turned me onto a new option when they bought a pig — a live pig — from New Moon Organics Farm up in Shively. With the aid of their friend Mike, who does some butchering in his job at a charcuterie down south, they drove up to Shively one sunny afternoon and they selected a 130-pound pig from nice farmers Jane, Sean and John, and killed and butchered it. New Moon Organics sells its pigs for only $5 bucks a pound or $100 per piglet, which is a steal for pasture-raised certified organic pork.

New Moon Organics raises American Guinea hogs, which at one point were so common in the US they were called “yard hogs” — everyone had one in the backyard. American Guinea hogs are “lard hogs,” not “bacon hogs,” so they fell out of favor when everyone cottoned on to how indispensable bacon is, their numbers falling nationally to fewer than a hundred. Now, thanks to small farmers, American Guinea hogs have risen in popularity, though they are still among the rarest heritage breeds. Guineas are a smaller breed and slow growers. Females only grow to 150-180 pounds. This makes them much more manageable if you are thinking of butchering one for home eating — a 500-pound pig would take a lot of freezer space.

Don't be concerned about the lard hog tag; there is still plenty of bacon on a Guinea. There is also plenty of lard, which is a good thing. Lard from pigs raised organically in lots of sunshine provides one of the healthiest fats you can consume, full of Vitamin D and all the good things. We use it in all sorts of cooking — it makes a hell of a pie crust. If you can find someone who knows anything about pig butchering and you have some freezer space, I strongly encourage you to consider this option. The pork is absolutely delicious and you keep your money entirely in Humboldt. Plus, pasture raised organic pork is practically a health food. You can reach New Moon Organics at (415) 531-7765, or newmoonorganics@gmail.com.

So now, of course, we have a freezer absolutely filled to bursting with pork. It's interesting trying to think beyond the comfortable, familiar cuts like chops, bacon and ribs; there is a lot of shoulder and plenty of cuts with bones that don't fit into a recognizable shape. I have become adept at the long, slow cook, which has two fine attributes: It is almost impossible to mess up and it makes for meat that is so tender, so succulent and rich, that you can pull it apart with your fingers. We've been having a lot of pulled pork dishes, with barbecue sauces for delicious sandwiches or flavored with cumin and lime juice for fantastic tacos. I have adapted a favorite Turkish method for cooking lamb for pork, and it's both really easy and absolutely delicious. The only caveat is it takes time. It uses a lot of fresh spring herbs, so it's good if you are feeling tired of heavy, wintry dishes with root vegetables. Serve it with quartered potatoes roasted in olive oil, or nice fresh flatbread and a big salad.

Jada's Any Bone-in Pork, Spring Style

Serves 6

4 pounds of any cut of pork that has a bone, trimmed of excess (but not all) fat
2 large bunches of scallions, chopped
1 bunch of dill, finely chopped
½ bunch parsley, finely chopped
4 cloves garlic, minced
1 large onion, roughly chopped
1 cup water
2 tablespoons olive oil
¼ cup balsamic vinegar
1 lemon, quartered
Salt and pepper

In a heavy bottomed saucepan over medium heat, heat 1 tablespoon olive oil and add the garlic. Stir until fragrant. Add the meat, herbs, onion, water, olive oil, vinegar and a generous pinch each of salt and pepper. Cover and bring to a simmer. Turn the heat down to maintain a low simmer and cook about 2 ½ to 3 hours, turning the meat over occasionally and adding a little more water as necessary to keep some simmering liquid — you don't want the pan to go dry. The meat should be so tender you can pull it apart with your fingers. Squeeze fresh lemon wedges to taste over each serving. ●

Meet Our Neighbors: E & O Lanes

E & O is under new ownership! On March 17th longtime E & O patron, Andre Carey purchased E & O Bowl, now E & O Lanes from owner Bobby Scott. Originally opened in 1960 by two brothers, Lee and Lester. One used the last name Larsen and the other changed it to Larson, hence the name "E & O". Now with the help of his partner, Carla Kendrick, Andre hopes to maintain the history of the place his family took him to as a kid. "I loved bowling as a kid and when I was 18 I bowled a perfect game here, I've always loved the place and when I learned it was for sale I jumped at the opportunity," explains Andre.

"We are having a grand opening party on May 20th and would like to invite the community to attend. It will be from 11AM-8PM. We have a band playing from 1PM-8PM. We are having a BBQ where folks can get a plate of tri-tip or chicken for $10. It will be $2 bowling and shoes during the event; we will have a kids zone and will be giving away some free stuff. We hope the community will come out and support," Andre explains. "We would also like to thank Murphy's Market for their continued support, it is great having a neighbor that has always been community minded and they help us out a lot."

E & O Lanes is located at 1417 Glendale Dr. If you can't make it to the grand opening party, E & O is open seven days a week from 11AM-2AM. Andre would like to remind everyone that they are still doing parties, reservations needed, and that the 13th Lane Bar is still open for business. So swing by E & O Lanes on May 20th and say hi to Andre and bowl a few frames.

About Bob

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

My freshman year in high school, I'd hitch rides to school with my friend Cameron and his mother. Cameron and I would groggily listen to cassettes his older brother gave him: Led Zeppelin, Pink Floyd and Bob Dylan. We listened to Dylan from The Freewheelin' Bob Dylan up to Blood On the Tracks and anything in between, often rewinding them because we were too enthralled to let go of what we just heard. The words were more colorful, more vivid and more real than the California coast passing by our windows those early mornings. After one of many mornings listening to "Mr. Tambourine Man" on loop, Cameron and I were working in the high school theater, hanging lights and running sound cables when our "shop teacher" Matt Gourley — yes, the Matt Gourley — put on Bringing It All Back Home and things got sublime. The Southern California sunshine flowed through the doors and we all got lost in the groove of our tasks, hands seeming to melt into the ladders we climbed, our boots vibrating on the steps. "Evenin's empires has returned into sand ... the ancient empty street's too dead for dreaming ... take me on a trip upon your magic swirling ship, my senses have been stripped, my hands can't feel to grip, my toes too numb to step ... I'm ready to go anywhere, I'm ready for to fade ... the smoke rings of my mind, down the foggy ruins of time ... out to the windy beach ..." Fifteen feet in the air, we waited for the peak, for the magic to reveal itself, and it happened. "Yes, to dance beneath the diamond sky with one hand waving free. Silhouetted by the sea, circled by the circus sands. With all memory and fate, driven deep beneath the waves. Let me forget about today until tomorrow."

Celebrate Dylan with your neighbors next week (more info below).

Thursday

Get your bluegrass on tonight as our own Compost Mountain Boys are back doing their string thing at the Mad River Brewery Tap room at 6 p.m. Like all MRB shows, it's free and all ages. Just don't let your kids sip your beer alright? Once you're done there, leave the kids in the car — please leave the window cracked — and head over to the Logger Bar just a few blocks away for some "banjo punk" from Alaska courtesy of Samm Bones. Country crooner Gabe Rozzell will be the local anchor so make sure you get there by 9 p.m. for this free show. Should a gentleman come in and start screaming at the bartenders that it's too loud, be kind to the guy and help remind him where the door is and that foam earplugs have been in existence since 1972.

Friday

Sticking with Blue Lake, you'll find the country stylings of Cadillac Ranch at the Mad River Brewery Tap Room at 6 p.m. Same deal as usual, it's free and all ages, but feel free to tip the band. The RLA Trio is hosting its third show in the Westhaven Center for the Arts Jazz Series at 7 p.m. The featured artist this evening is Francis Vanek who is a "superb saxophonist," according to none other than the S.F. Chronicle. It'll be top-shelf jazz with a sliding scale of $5-$20. It's the silver anniversary of The Eureka Symphony, which will be celebrating at The Arkley Center for the Performing Arts at 8 p.m. The orchestra will play Mendelssohn's Concerto in E Minor with guest violinist Otis Harriel. Some Copland is on the bill and fans of the National Park System will get a rare treat in here, as well, according to a press release I received. If you're to believe the website, however, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony a.k.a. "The Ode to Joy" is on tap for the night. Either way, you're in for great playing tonight. Prices run from $19 to $49. Show starts at 8 p.m. My friend Shane wanted to make sure I was in the know about a show happening at The Miniplex in Arcata with Australian rockers Shovels, who are in town and joined by Colossal Yes from the Bay Area. Shane says the latter are "super cool" and have a "former member of Comets on Fire, Utrillo Kushner, who is an old Eureka punker. He's in a lot of cool bands in the East Bay." Add locals The Tweeners to the bill and only a $5 cover charge and you're pretty much guaranteed a packed house. Show up early to get in before the music starts at 9 p.m.

Saturday

One of the more cheekily named local bands, For Folk's Sake — or is it For Folks' Sake? — are at the Mad River Brewery Tap

The Hanneke Cassel Band plays the Arcata Playhouse at 8 p.m. on Saturday, May 20.

Courtesy of the artists

Room at 6 p.m. and for free. Enjoy the show, the local beer and feel free to let me know how to spell the band's name correctly. "One-Man-Psychedelic-Acoustiloop musician" Holus Bolus also known as Tom Boylan is stopping by the Westhaven Center for the Arts at 7 p.m. to do his loopy groove thing. Opening up the show is Trinidad local singer-songwriter Bruce Taylor. Not sure on a ticket price for this one. In case you missed The Eureka Symphony performing whatever it is they performed last night, you've got another chance tonight at 8 p.m. Look above for more information. Is it just me, or has Scottish fiddle music been making a strong appearance in Humboldt lately? Nothing wrong with it, of course, and with that said, the Hanneke Cassel Band is in town tonight at the Arcata Playhouse at 8 p.m. Expect to hear plenty from last month's release of Trip to Walden Pond with her band featuring husband and cellist Mike Block along with guitarist Christopher Lewis. $20 will get you a seat to hear these virtuosos all together in an intimate setting. For something a little jammier, head to Humboldt Brews to catch Edge of the West with Buddy Cage which features members of Jefferson Starship, the David Nelson Band, New Riders of the Purple Sage and Great American Taxi. The jams will weave in and out and will start around 9 p.m. Not sure on the ticket price for this one, but maybe something in the $25 and up range would make sense. Humboldt's favorite Beatles tribute band Silver Hammer returns to the Wave Lounge in the Blue Lake Casino and Hotel at 9 p.m. tonight and for free. Sing and dance along, and give it up for the band. Filling about three hours with songs that are mostly under three minutes ain't no small task. In Arcata, you'll find "all vinyl garage rock DJs" Garage Au-Go-Go spinning it up at the Alibi joined by local spin-masters Adam and Red with the show starting around 11 p.m. and for only $2.

Wednesday

Bob Dylan turns 76 today and that means it's time for the seventh annual Bob Dylan Birthday Bash happening at Blue Lake's Mad River Brewery at 5 p.m. Local musician/promoter/engineer/nice guy Chris Parriera has been organizing these tributes so make sure you thank him for all the hard work. I know Bob's voice isn't for everyone, but he, like The Beatles, is an artist who has shaped our realities more than we'll ever really appreciate. Remind me some time to tell you about the last time I was at the Brewery and overheard some college kids saying they "didn't think The Beatles were that good." Let's just say I left mid-beer before making a scene. You'll hear Dylan's songs, and the entirety of Nashville Skyline performed by locals The Detours, Jeff Kelley, Jan Bramlett, Les Scharnberg, Rosalind Parducci, Matt Brody and above-mentioned Parriera. It's a free show, but again, feel free to show your appreciation to these locals paying tribute to one of America's heroes.

Getting excited about Oyster Fest? It'll be here soon. Not soon enough? We hear you. Thankfully the Oyster Fest Kick-Off Party is this Thursday, May 18 from 6 to 8 p.m. at Plaza View Room ($15). Whet your appetite for the full day (only a month away!) with delicious oysters on the half shell, appetizers and a no-host bar.

Persepolis

One night a month, the Arcata Theatre Lounge donates its space, rent free, to a nonprofit for a fundraising event. This month, it's Breakfast all Day Collective, showing Persepolis, the award-winning animated film that follows a young girl coming of age against the backdrop of the Iranian Revolution on Friday, May 19, at 7:30 p.m. ($5).

Don't miss the dazzling spectacle Aerials in Wonderland, Friday, May 19 at 7:30 p.m., Saturday, May 20 at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday, May 21 at 1 p.m. at Synopsis Nova ($10) with a bake sale each night (watch out for anything marked "Eat Me").

Spurred On

Want to make a Texas-sized difference in a youngster's life? Do you enjoy barbecue, beer and country music? Then saddle up for the Silver Spurs Gala taking place Saturday, May 20 from 6 to 10 p.m. at the Fortuna River Lodge ($50, $40 advance). This evening of dinner and dancing benefits Wild Souls Ranch, a nonprofit organization that helps local at-risk youth by providing equine assisted growth and learning weekly at no cost to participating families. That's mighty nice.

Shamus T Bones will be serving up a barbecue dinner of pork ribs, pulled pork sliders, brisket sliders, veggie burgers, spinach strawberry salad, Caesar salad and mashed potatoes. While you're gnawing on ribs, you'll be happy to know that your greenbacks are helping Wild Souls Ranch pay for feed, farrier, board and vet bills for its horses. Money raised from the last Silver Spurs Gala allowed the expansion needed to take on 20 more children to the program. Also mighty nice.

Do your bidding at the live and silent auctions, and walk away with fine items and experiences donated by local businesses. There's music and dancing courtesy of Lone Star Junction, Humboldt's "outlaw country band," and a no-host bar featuring top hop juice from Lost Coast, Mad River and Eel River breweries, and wine from local wineries.

Crowned Royal

It's the middle of May and in Humboldt, that means one thing: Kinetic madness is right around the corner. Priming the pump (we came up with that) for Memorial Day weekend's Kinetic Grand Championship is the annual Rutabaga Ball, happening this Saturday, May 20 from 7 p.m. to midnight at the Bayside Grange Hall ($12, $10 if you bring your own non-disposable cup). The majestic three-round pageant, where competition is fierce and bribery is blatant and rampant (and encouraged!), introduces the community to a bevy of beauties all vying for the coveted title of Rutabaga Queen. The Queen's duties? Reigning gloriously over the 2017 Kinetic Grand Championship Race, making sure all her subjects are happy and having fun.

The ball, hosted by Kinetic Universe, is an evening of more glitter than you remember encountering past the age of five. The battle royale includes Ball Gown, Bay Crossing (swimsuit-scowhimsuit) and Talent rounds. Live music by Christina and the Northcoasters will keep the taffeta twirling all night, and Rutabaga Royal cocktails, beer from Mad River Brewing Company and cider from Humboldt Cider Company will make sure your whistle's wet — which is good because the more noise you make for your queenly contender, the better she fares.

So, suit up, show up and root for your Ruta. Doors and bar open at 7 p.m. and the sparkly good times begin at 8 p.m.

Throwaway Throwbacks

Snatched and King Arthur

By John J. Bennett

Reviews

SNATCHED. When Amy Schumer, building on the success both of her stand-up comedy and subversive, hilarious TV show Inside Amy Schumer, made her first foray into the Hollywood mainstream, she did it like a cagey pro. Teaming with director Judd Apatow, starring and working from her own screenplay, she came out with Trainwreck (2015). The movie draws on the history of romantic comedy every bit as effectively as it does Schumer's unique comic perspective; it services its own story and her persona with equal aptitude. I find it a resoundingly successful effort, and it continues to hold up after multiple viewings. The only "problem" with it might be that it sets too high a bar for Amy Schumer, Movie Star. Perhaps in an attempt to avoid comparison or repetition, Snatched finds Schumer pivoting into an altogether different type of genre comedy picture. It's unfair to assume anything about influences but I can say that Schumer, writer Katie Dippold (The Heat, Ghostbusters) and director Jonathan Levine (50/50, The Night Before) are all of the same generation: my generation. And I know that I was very much influenced, in my long ago youth, by the buddy-adventure comedies of the day. Romancing the Stone (1984) and Outrageous Fortune (1988) are two that spring to mind, as they seem to have informed the makers of Snatched as much as they did me.

Emily (Schumer) — aimless, self-obsessed, borderline unemployable — has booked a South American vacation that she can hardly afford. On the eve of their departure, though, her equally narcissistic rocker boyfriend Michael (Randall Park) informs her that he won't be accompanying her, on vacation or in life. In a fit of nostalgia and loneliness, Emily convinces her neurotic, almost housebound mother, Linda (Goldie Hawn, returning to the screen after a 15-year hiatus), to join her on the trip. Mother and daughter begin to process some of their differences poolside but things start to go sideways after Emily becomes smitten with a handsome stranger (Tom Bateman). In short order, they find themselves on the run through the jungle, pursued by a vicious criminal kingpin (Oscar Jaenada). They are aided — after a fashion — along the way by an inept explorer (Christopher Meloni), a kindly village doctor (Arturo Castro) and a platonic pair with dark pasts (Wanda Sykes and Joan Cusack). Meanwhile, stateside, Emily's socially disastrous brother Jeffrey (Ike Barinholtz) attempts to annoy the US State Department to action.

Running into your ex. Every damn time.

Snatched

Snatched takes some risks that most comedies wouldn't: It is violent and foul-mouthed, and centered on a protagonist who isn't exactly likeable. In some of these efforts, the movie succeeds, yielding satisfying laughs. But some of them (an extended sequence about a tapeworm, for example) burn off their energy before the punch line.

Because I like that Schumer continues to defy Hollywood norms and expectations, and because for whatever reason I tend to like her intentionally unlikeable screen persona, it's possible I give her lesser efforts more credit than they are due. That tendency, coupled with nostalgia for the movies of my youth, may have led me to want to enjoy Snatched more than I actually did. Colorful and lively though it may be, it seems doubtful that it will be much remembered. R. 91M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

KING ARTHUR: LEGEND OF THE SWORD. In a later, hazier period of my youth, Guy Ritchie's first two movies loom large, indeed. Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels (1998) brought dynamism and fun to the often-overwrought, under-written British crime drama. Snatch (2000) re-upped the style and cheekiness of Ritchie's storytelling and may well mark the beginning of the end. His next two movies were basically unwatchable exercises in hubris. He recovered slightly with RockNRolla (2008) but it was derivative, informed by the genre that his early movies seemed to be a reaction against. And then he resurfaced as a maker of mega-budget tent poles that don't make a whole lot of sense.

The widespread appeal of his riff on Sherlock Holmes (2009), with its mélange of mixed martial arts, sardonic humor and slow-motion violence, makes sense, I suppose, even if I don't really share in it. (My ambivalence hasn't affected the box office: The second sequel is in the works). And while I enjoyed the fashion and set dressing of The Man from U.N.C.L.E. (2015), it's hard to believe it became a major release. Which makes it an appropriate predecessor to King Arthur, in a way, because I can't understand how anybody thought this would be a good idea.

For one thing, it would seem that the last decade and a half of Peter Jackson's output, plus the total cultural saturation of Game of Thrones, would have provided everyone with more than enough mediocre fantastical medieval set dressing. But someone in an office somewhere apparently thought that if way too much is good, then more is better. Incorrect.

Vortigern (Jude Law) usurps his brother Uther's (Eric Bana) throne. The sword Excalibur becomes set in stone, Uther's son and rightful heir Arthur (Charlie Hunnam) is cast out, to be raised in back alleys and brothels. He goes on — in a lively montage! — to become a brawling back-alley entrepreneur and leader of men. Circumstances lead him to remove said sword from stone, which of course leads to a protracted conflict with his visibly perturbed uncle.

Rolling into WinCo on payday.
King Arthur Legend of the Sword

We all know the story, the style of the thing is all over the shop and Hunnam, despite his cracked brand of charisma, isn't the right type of leading man for the job.

HUMBOLDT BAY TRAIL: THE 'FINAL FOUR'

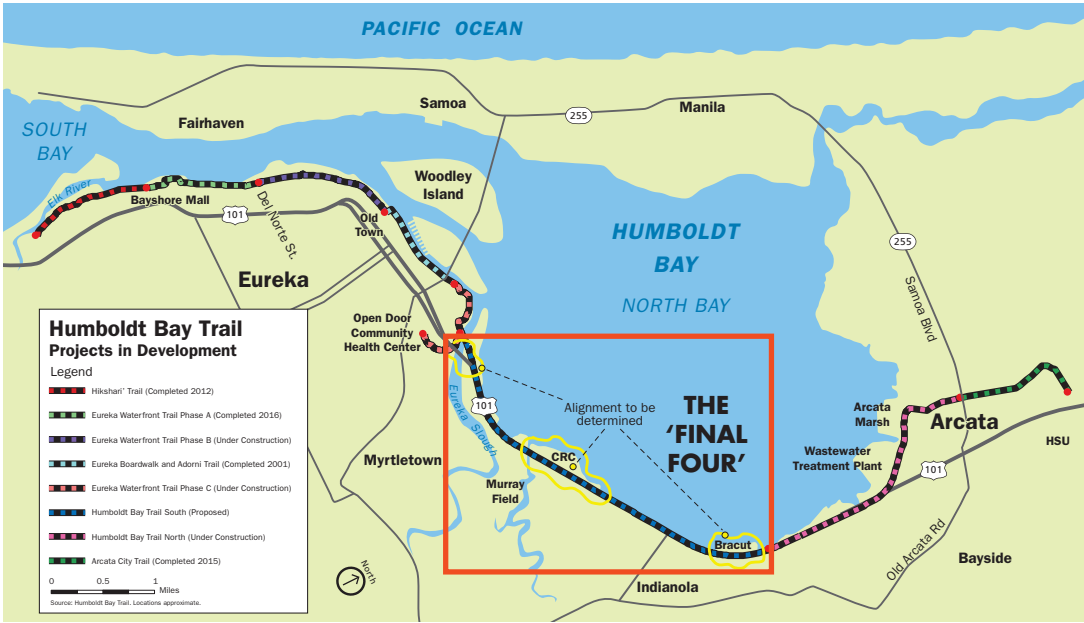

The 13-mile Humboldt Bay Trail from south Eureka through Arcata is close to a reality. Construction is complete or underway on all but for the final four miles of trail — from Target to the Bracut Industrial Park.

Design-engineering for the final four miles, a section called the Bay Trail South, is underway. State and federal funds will be sought for construction as well, but trail maintenance and emergency repair will fall to the county and cities.

To help secure public construction funds for the Bay Trail South, we need to demonstrate the community's willingness to accept responsibility for long-term maintenance for this section and all county trails.

Therefore, the Humboldt Bay Trail Fund has been established with the Humboldt Area Foundation to receive donations from the community with these priorities: trail maintenance and support of volunteer initiatives; emergency repairs; trail amenities; cost-share for state and federal funds.

NOTICE OF PROPERTY TAX DELINQUENCY AND IMPENDING DEFAULT

Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3351, 3352

I, John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector, State of California, certify as follows:

That at close of business on June 30, 2017 by operation of law, any real property (unless previously tax-defaulted and not redeemed) that have any delinquent taxes, assessments, or other charges levied for the fiscal year 2016-2017, and/or any delinquent supplemental taxes levied prior to the fiscal year 2016-2017 shall be declared tax-defaulted.

That unless the tax defaulted property is completely redeemed through payment of all unpaid amounts, together with penalties and fees prescribed by law or an installment plan is initiated and maintained; the property may be sold subsequently at a tax sale to satisfy the tax lien.

That a detailed list of all properties remaining tax-defaulted at the close of business on June 30, 2017, and not redeemed prior to being submitted for publication, shall be published on or before September 8, 2017

That information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector at 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, California 95501 (707)476-2450.

I certify or (declare), under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct.

John Bartholomew
Humboldt County Tax Collector

Executed at Eureka, Humboldt County, California, on May 15th, 2017. Published in the North Coast Journal on May 18th, May 25th, and June 1st, 2017.

NOTICE OF IMPENDING POWER TO SELL TAX-DEFAULTED PROPERTY

Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3361, 3362

Pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code 3691 and 3692.4, the following conditions will, by operation of law, subject real property to the Tax Collector's power to sell.

1) All property for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for five or more years.

Note: The power to sell schedule for nonresidential commercial property is three or more years of tax-defaulted status, unless the county adopts, by ordinance or resolution, the five-year tax default schedule.

2) All property that has a nuisance abatement lien recorded against it and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.

3) Any property that has been identified and requested for purchase by a city, county, city and county or nonprofit organization to serve the public benefit by providing housing or services directly related to low-income persons and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.

The parcels listed herein meet one or more of the criteria listed above and thus, will become subject to the Tax Collector's power to sell on July 1, 2017, at 12:01 a.m., by operation of law. The Tax Collector's power to sell will arise unless the property is either redeemed or made subject to an installment plan of redemption initiated as provided by law prior to close of business on the last business day in June. The right to an installment plan terminates on the last business day in June, and after that date the entire balance due must be paid in full to prevent sale of the property at public auction.

The right of redemption survives the property becoming subject to the power to sell, but it terminates at close of business on the last business day prior to the date of the sale by the Tax Collector.

All information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption will be furnished, upon request, by John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector, 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, CA 95501, (707)476-2450.

The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of June 2017, is shown opposite the assessment/parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.

PARCEL NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

The Assessor's Parcel/Assessment Number (APN/ASMT), when used to describe property in this list, refers to the Assessor's map book, the map page, the block on the map, if applicable, and the individual parcel on the map page or in the block. The Assessor's maps and further explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the Assessor's office.

Field Notes

It's About Time

By Barry Evans
fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

When English novelist H.G. Wells published The Time Machine in 1895, the novel's plot device uncannily presaged Albert Einstein's 1905 Theory of Special Relativity. In Wells' yarn — since copied, adapted and butchered hundreds of times in books and movies — the unnamed Time Traveller simply adjusts the dials of his titular steampunk contraption to move to the future or past as effortlessly as walking up or down a road. Instead of thinking of time as fixed and immutable (per Isaac Newton), we are given to understand that time is "merely" another dimension like length, width and breadth. As the Time Traveller explains to his skeptical friends before disappearing into the future, "There is no difference between Time and any of the three dimensions of Space except that our consciousness moves along it." Einstein couldn't have put it better.

For Wells, "a thoroughly modern man, a believer in socialism, free love and bicycles," according to science writer James Gleick in his new book Time Travel, this was all smoke and mirrors. In a droll piece of self-mockery, Wells would later say of his creation: "The effect of reality is easily produced. One jerks in one or two unexpected gadgets or so, and the trick is done." But what a trick! For that ardent socialist, The Time Machine was a fable, a way of warning his late-19th century readers what might happen if the divide between capitalists and workers played out to its logical conclusion. In the novel, in the year 802,701 AD, the human race has splintered: The toffs have evolved into frail, surface-dwelling Eloi (beloved of vowel-starved crossword compilers), while working stiffs have become brutish underground dwellers, the Morlocks. Every night, hungry Morlocks emerge to dine on their Eloi livestock.

Poster for George Pal's 1960 movie The Time Machine. It won the "Special Effects" Oscar.

My own memory of the story, read as an impressionable pre-teen living in England not far from where it all takes place, centers on the protagonist's final temporal destination (after barely escaping the dystopian Morlock-Eloi arena), far, far in the future. Arriving during our planet's last days — silent, cold and gray, almost devoid of life, the sun now red-bloated and dim, he barely makes it out alive: "... a deadly nausea seized me ... But a terrible dread of lying helpless in that remote and awful twilight sustained me while I clambered upon the saddle."

What both Wells' "trick" and Einstein's theory fails to explain is "time's arrow." It's all very well to make time "just" another dimension, akin to our three spatial dimensions, but the analogy fails when set against the most unyielding fact of life: the Second Law of Thermodynamics, aka entropy. The egg will never unbreak, the campfire will never revert to logs, disorder will never spontaneously become order. We can move freely to and fro through space, and the fundamental laws of physics are completely reversible, yet one-way time moves irredeemably from past to future. As journalist John Lanchester tersely writes, "we experience time's arrow every moment of our conscious lives. Time is everywhere, except in the equations."

Despite Wells and many subsequent time-travel storytellers, we are prisoners living in Rudyard Kipling's "unforgiving minute." We've had more than a century of post-Newtonian relativity to inform us, yet here we are, just as stuck in the present moment as H.G. Wells' astonished readers of 1895.

And there went five minutes of your time. Gone forever. ●
